

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS EAGLE PARTS FOR A NATIVE AMERICAN RELIGIOUS PURPOSES PERMIT

Recognizing the significance of eagles to Native Americans, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (Service) established the National Eagle Repository (Repository) in the early 1970s to provide Native Americans with bald and golden eagle remains for religious purposes. The Service requires a Federal Native American Religious Purposes Permit Application/Order Form be completed and submitted to the Repository for members of United States Federally Recognized Tribes to receive eagle parts.

As of October 1, 2021, the Repository processes all Eagle Parts for Native American Religious Purposes Permit applications, whereas previously some of these functions were handled through the Service's Migratory Bird Program. The Repository now processes all new applications, amendments (e.g., name changes, changes to contact information), and reorder forms. Tribal members will no longer need to submit a permit application to regional Migratory Bird Permit Offices and then to the Repository.

Before requesting a permit, please review the following regulations:

- Title 50 Parts 10, 13, 21, 22 of the Code of Federal Regulations \(CFR\)
- Bald and Golden Eagle Protection Act
