Chronic Wasting Disease (CWD)

CWD is a fatal disease that affects the nervous system of deer, elk, moose and caribou. Transmission occurs when disease prions are shed by infected animals through saliva, urine, feces and natural decomposition after death. The CWD infectious agent, or prion, is extremely resistant to decay in the environment. Because of this, baiting, feeding and improper carcass disposal increase the risk of transmission.

While there has not been a documented case of CWD in humans, the Wisconsin Department of Health Services (DHS), the Centers for Disease Control and World Health Organization recommend against consuming meat from CWD-infected deer. Infected deer can look healthy; however, DHS encourages testing for the disease regardless of your harvested deer's physical condition. The DHS also recommends the public only consume venison from deer where the test results indicate CWD was not detected.

Please have your deer tested for CWD at the following locations:

For additional information on baiting and feeding regulations, carcass disposal, and CWD please see: https://dnr.wisconsin.gov/topic/wildlifehabitat/cwd
